This class is designed to introduce students to the important concepts, theories, and frameworks central to the study of race (and other intersecting identities such as gender, class, and sexuality) in American life. We will explore concepts such as racialization, the development of race as a social category, the deep history of contemporary racial formations, and social movements of various individuals and communities that have challenged the status quo in a racist society.